Responding to a questionnaire which Albany parents ed in January, the YMCA primarily will offer "hard emic classes," Young said. "That's what parents ted so that's what we're offering."

Courses will be in the computer, math, science, ESL English fields. There also will be dance and art es.

Racism suit goes to court

Claim made by black ex-cop

By JUDY POLUMBAUM

ALBANY — A five-year-old lawsuit by a former Albany police officer charging the city and police department with racial discrimination has come to trial in Alameda County Superior Court.

Harold Evans, who worked in Albany during 1974-78, was the only black patrolman ever employed by the city.

Evans' suit claims that he was the butt of racist jokes and that fellow officers referred to him with such derogatory terms as be-bop, liver lips, jig, burr-headed, thick-lipped and bug-eyed.

It also claims he was disciplined more frequently and severely than white officers for minor rule infractions, received less favorable work assignments and shifts and was denied promotions because of his color.

Evans was fired from the Albany Police Department in March 1978, three months after it emerged that he had diabetes. His suit blames racial discrimination for various physical and mental problems, and alleges that the city illegally fired him for a medical condition.

The suit demands $2 million in damages, plus lost wages and benefits and reimbursement for legal costs.

Attorneys for the defendants, who include Police Chief James Simmons, are expected to argue that Evans was fired for disobeying an order from Simmons to produce a medical report.

The defense also maintains that Evans complaints concern locker-room joking that was not meant to be insulting, and that the plaintiff him-

Schools accept 3 donations

LBANY — At its mid-May meeting the Albany Board of Education accepted three donations — covering the fields of athics, computers a nd printing — a community concerned about imited educational resources of scally strapped districts.

The most recent donation of over 00 by the Albany High School nters Organization brings the t has contributed to nearly $20,-

According to Superintendent Dr. Stephen Goldstone, this amount equals both the cost of the original investment in equipment to set up the organization's weekly bingo games and the total cost of after-school athletic fees which the district would have been forced to charge students.

The combined generosity of two computer companies, the CompuPro Division of Godbout Electronics and G & G Engineering, has given Albany's computer program a sharp boost. At the end of last summer the

Albany High graduates a 'pioneer' student

By CHARLES PELTON

"At the end of this year an important chapter will come to a close at Albany High School."
— Jonah Markkowitz

ALBANY — Whenever we look back at that rite of passage known as high school graduation, we see the end of a turbulent period of growth, youth and education.

Albany senior Jonah Markowitz not only sees this, but knows the profound impact he has had on an entire community.

Markowitz — afflicted with cerebral palsy since birth, legally blind, mostly wheelchair confined and with a speech handicap — has been attending Albany schools since the eighth grade. This year he graduates.

Markowitz's education reflects a growing trend towards mainstreaming disabled students in public schools around the country. With multiple disabilities, he was a pioneer in the Albany school district's education of the handicapped.

It was after attending the Charles A. Whitton School for the orthopedically handicapped in Oakland through the seventh grade, that Markowitz and his parents decided to try public schools.

ALBANY — Responding to complaints about racetrack and commuter parking spilling onto residential streets near Golden Gate Fields, Albany's Public Works Department will conduct a survey to determine whether a preferential parking system in the neighborhood would be in order.

Big sewer probe is underway

The East Bay Infiltration/Inflow Study is beginning work on its second major task — sewer testing and inspection — as part of the effort to eliminate wet weather sewer overflows in Alameda, Albany, Berkeley, Emeryville, Oakland, Piedmont and the Stege Sanitary District. Smoke tests began May 20.

Project coordinator Richard Wood, Jr. explained, "Before our study began it was obvious that much of the East Bay sanitary sewer collection system was letting too much rain water in, but no one knew where most of the leaks were.

"Last year we monitored wet weather flows to select the worst problem basins and sub-basins for more intensive study. Now we are beginning our dry season sewer testing and inspection programs to locate leaks in these areas," he said.

According to Wood, beginning in late spring, special non-toxic smoke will be blown into sections of the sewer system to trace leaks and find faulty or improper sewer connections. In some places dye-colored water will also be used to trace leaks and to verify some suspected cross connections with storm drains. As a result, smoke may be seen coming from roof vents, building foundations or manhole covers.

Wood noted that the smoke will not enter buildings that are properly plumbed and vented if all water traps contain water.

The smoke is a non-toxic substance which is clean and harmless to humans, pets, food and material goods. The dye-colored water can

Patrick Keeffe, editor of the Times Journal for the past three and a half years, takes leave of that post today for a move to New York.

Roberta Alexander, the paper's former city editor, has been promoted to editor.

Keeffe, a native of Madison, Wis., and a graduate of the University of Wisconsin and UC-Berkeley's Graduate School of Journalism, got his start in the newspaper business as a reporter for a community weekly in Monona, Wis.

He and his wife, Linda Ray, decided to move east to be closer to their families.

Keeffe said he is looking for journalism work in the New York metropolitan area, but would not mind if unemployment forced a vacation on him for a little while.

Keeffe and Alexander have collaborated since October 1979, when the former Albany Times and El Cerrito Journal were merged.

Albany racism trial begins self encouraged the racial "horseplay" he claims to be the victim of.

Jury selection in the trial began last week and continued Monday, and testimony was expected to start this week before Judge Marie Collins.

Attorney Jacqueline Lum, a partner in the Oakland law firm representing Evans, predicted the trial would last four or five weeks and witnesses would number in the dozens.

Lum said the plaintiff's side plans to present a case proving "racial discrimination culminating in a lost job and lost career."

She said the evidence will show that the jokes directed at Evans "were quite inflammatory and quite racist in their tone."

Evans' attorneys also will attempt to show "disparate treatment in discipline," Lum said. They maintain that while Evans was suspended for as many as 20 days off without pay, the most meted out to a white officer was 10 days — and that for a serious disciplinary violation.

"We're alleging that Harold's infractions were very minor," said Lum, "and that one of the things they were trying to do was get rid of him."

Another allegation is that Evans' hiring helped the city become eligible for some $72,000 in federal funds under an affirmative action act. That act expired in the late 1970s and "they didn't need him anymore," Lum said.

She suggested that the 1977 recall election in Albany which knocked two liberal members off the City Council also played a role by stalling affirmative action in city employment.

Lum said Evans had diabetes when he was hired in 1974, but apparently neither he nor the city was aware of it. He was first treated in 1977 when he arrived at Oakland's Kaiser Hospital in what one doctor described as a "prediabetic coma."

That doctor, in a letter contained in court files, said the disease was "uncomplicated" but that Evans should not do work involving "long and strenuous hours with irregular meals."

The Albany Police Department suspended Evans on March 14, 1978, instructing him to provide medical evidence attesting to his fitness to work as a police officer by March 16. When he failed to meet the deadline, he was dismissed.

Less than a month later, he filed a workers compensation claim alleging that the "stress and strain of employment" had caused him physical and emotional injury.

A workers compensation judge in Oakland found that Evans had been exposed on the job "to repetitive mentally traumatic experiences extending over a period of time," and set a disability award amounting to nearly $3,000. An appeals board in San Francisco more than doubled the award to $6,510.

The city appealed that decision to San Francisco Superior Court, which declined to hear the case.

Evans, formerly a resident of Richmond, worked for Safeway for a while after losing the Albany job. Subsequently, he moved to Phoenix and got a job with the Department of Corrections.

two firms contributed nearly $6,500 in equipment and services.

At its last meeting the board accepted over $15,300 in additional equipment and consulting time for a system which assistant superintendent Richard Rosenquist described as "both flexible and expandable."

The board received a third donation from Winterland Productions in the form of $2,900 in printing equipment and materials for the Albany High School Print Club.

"We've been very fortunate to have such generous people to support our schools," board member Dr. Gerald Brunetti said.

In other business, the board approved courses of study for both the English and social studies departments of Albany High School. Both departments were given $5,000 each towards the purchase of new textbooks.

The need for new texts has been especially acute in the social studies department, where some texts suffer heavy, continuous use or have become outdated. Albany's psychology texts were first purchased in the late 1950s; the comparative economic texts are from the early 1960s.

Alluding to the department's acute needs and its heavy load of 15 sections of required courses, department chair Charles Clark pleaded for more textbook material.

"It's difficult to teach under these circumstances," he said. "So we use a great deal of imagination."

Superintendent Goldstone said that the district is forced "to play catch up" with new textbook material. Assistant superintendent Rosenquist explained that the district is forced to raise its own funds for secondary school texts. Primary school texts are funded by the state.

While routinely discussing overnight field trips, which the board must approve, vice president Kay Rabin asked the administration to clarify the district's policy concerning the compulsory wearing of seatbelts on these trips.

Rabin indicated that there should be some sort of district requirement on field trips. Board president Robert Nehls, while agreeing with such a requirement in principle, called such a rule "unenforceable."

The administration also presented the results of this year's testing of eighth graders for the minimum proficiencies in reading, mathematics and writing which are a graduation requirement for Albany youngsters.

The percentage of students who pass this examination on their first try has been steadily increasing since the 1979-80 academic year. In the reading category 79 percent of those taking the test passed, compared with 62 percent in 1979-80. In [illegible] this has climbed from 6[illegible] cent. Schools

Instead of discipline, they emphasize English

By BARBARA ERICKSON

At Washington School in Point Richmond, back-to-basics is out. Instead of discipline and dress codes, teachers have taken up a new type of alternative education — the written word.

"Writing at the drop of a hat," is the way principal Mario Petroni describes the plan, which will go into effect next year. It will require teachers to teach writing daily and use the skill in every subject from physical education to math.

Washington set off on its new course in reaction to the back-to-basics movement in Richmond Unified schools.

"One or two parents" suggested making Washington into a basic site, Petroni said, but when the issue came up at PTA meeting, no one wanted to make the change.

"They were satisfied with the school," he said, and they agreed that "basics was not right for Washington."

They considered setting up an alternative arts program, Petroni said, but when he suggested a new emphasis on writing to the teachers, the faculty warmed to it.

"It started from the ground up," said teacher Harriet Berg, who has helped put the new program in motion. "It was something the teachers decided they wanted to do."

Berg said writing has been neglected compared to other skills. Teachers are required to teach a certain number of minutes each week of reading, math, physical education, music or social studies, she said, but not in writing. It has been considered an "offshoot," something that comes naturally from reading lessons.

But writing, Petroni said, "is the final culmination of reading and thinking" and other skills. "It is the crux of the whole matter."

When students write, he said, they are forced to think clearly and analyze.

It is also a subject, Petroni said, which can be used in every other discipline. Students can write about their math lessons, the games they play in PE, about fights in the classroom or about their feelings. It can be creative or academic.

Writing is private, Petroni said, something students can do without the intrusion of another person. It can be therapeutic, and teachers learn more about the minds and hearts of their students when they read their compositions and poems.

Washington teachers will follow the guidelines of the Bay Area Writing Project, a program sponsored by UC-Berkeley to improve writing skills in public school students.

The project's method begins with "retelling" in the earliest grades. Students hear a story, tell it to a partner, and then write it down.

Later they write their own compositions and learn to edit their own work and the work of others.

At Washington, Petroni said, the students will write about holidays, they will write summaries, fables, myths, dialogues, and cartoons.

"There's no end," he said. "Some kids in fifth and sixth grade are fabulous at writing reviews. Whatever happens in the classroom they can write about it."

By the end of the year, Berg said, each student will have produced a book, and the children will read each other's books. Monthly, they will produce a newspaper and a book report. Each week classes will exchange and read each other's writing.

With continual writing practice, she said, mechanical errors in punctuation, grammar and spelling begin to disappear. Teachers will not correct these errors at first, she said, in order to encourage fluency. Later they will demand more accuracy.

"We will use writing as a lab for mechanics," Petroni said.

The school hopes to use money from its Chapter I allocation — funds for low-income, low-achieving student — to provide training for teachers. Instructors from the writing project will take part.

Washington has yet to select a name for the writing program, and the school also will apply to the school board to win an official alternative school designation. With board approval the school may become a magnet and draw students from throughout the district.

"We will try to get students to come here because they're interested in this," Petroni said.

With constant practice in writing, Berg said, students begin to think of themselves as writers.

"The main point," Petroni said, "is that everyone's a writer. We're going to try to make it automatic."

saying that outsiders' cars make it hard for residents to park in front of their own homes.

Public Works director Robert Guletz told the council Monday his department would go door-to-door to canvass the neighborhood's parking needs as well as conduct an on-street survey to determine the extent of the problem.

Staff should have a report for the city Traffic and Safety Commission in about two months, and a public hearing on the matter will be set after that.

Guletz said his department also would consider two other problem parking areas, Adams Street and the streets off Solano Avenue, but would not be doing systematic surveys at this time.

In addition to hearing this update on parking, the City Council took the following actions at its regular Monday night meeting:

• Accepted a gift of three concrete planters from Western Art Stone of Brisbane to adorn the Albany side of the new Solano-Peralta Park.

• Approved final documents for a condominium conversion project on Stannage Avenue. The project involves a 12-unit apartment building which will be turned into eight condominiums.

• Scheduled an all-day workshop on the fiscal 1983-84 budget for June 4, set a hearing on federal revenue sharing for June 13 and set formal presentation of the budget for June 27.

Whoops! Those devilish little type lice got into last week's Potluck column and scrambled the ingredients for two recipes. The corrected recipes are:

Orange-berry shake

2 T. frozen orange juice concentrate, undiluted
1 scoop vanilla ice cream
1/2 cup strawberries, cut in half

Process or put in blender for 30 seconds or until blend. Pour into tall glass and garnish with a whole strawberry. Makes 1.

Almond Meringue Cookies

4 egg whites, beaten stiff
3 T. powdered skim milk
1 t. vanilla flaovring
1 t. almond flavoring
1 t. liquid sweetener (try the new sweeteners made with aspartame)

Add milk powder to the stiffly beaten egg whites and sweetener and mix well. Add flavorings and sweetener. Drop by teaspoonful on a cookie sheet. Bake slowly at 275 degrees for 45 minutes or until dry. Dust with cinnamon.

The pleasures of preserving foods

Canning to preserve food was, at one time, a very common way to lay in a stock of food for future use. Often it required so much sugar or so much heat that it reduced the food's nutrient value to zero. It did, however, enable the homemaker to utilize an abundant harvest by extending the time for its consumption. It also added a little life to an otherwise bland meal. No doubt about it; a hot biscuit takes on a special air with a dab of homemade blackberry jam. Canned tomatoes added to a wine stew make a more colorful and tasty dish.

Today, we have so many other ways to preserve food that even in home economics classes (wherever they may have survived), students are rarely taught to make jams and jellies. In the past few years, home canning enjoyed a rush to popularity by young people seeking simpler foods that didn't have chemicals added in the proessing.

But alternate methods of preserving, such as freezing and dehydrating, are easily within the scope of today's homemaker. Personally, I hate — just hate — to can. All that bubbling hot sugar syrup and sterilized jars and tongs and paraffin (Lord have mercy!) give me the willies. Maybe that's because I'm basically klutzy in the kitchen and could maim myself too easily. I'd like to believe, however, that I choose not to process foods this way because it does destroy vitamins and often adds additional unnecessary sugar to the diet.

Watching your apricot tree weighed down with luscious fruits often created a compulsion to can around the clock. A duty, yet. My friend Evie remembers doing this and then having to clean up sweet, sticky spills for an hour more so that the ants wouldn't invade in the morning.

As for me, I'd rather eat myself into a coma with fresh apricots and then, upon reviving, bake pies for freezing. And, after today's experiment with dehydrating in my little convection oven, I might even prefer to dry the fruit, pack it in airtight plastic wrap, and store it for later rehydration.

A new technique

Today I experimented with dehydrating bananas, apples, carrots and strawberries. A four-ounce apple, sliced, dehydrated into an amount which barely jiggled the needle on the scale. A large carrot dehydrated into 2 T. of crispy little flakes. The obvious advantage here is reducing bulky foods for small space storage. A boon for hikers and back-packers, of course. The use of electricity amounted to approximately one hour's worth for 12 hours of dehydrating. Not bad, so one might say it is economical. Dried fruits make dandy snacks, too, and rehydrated, they can be used in cooking and baking.

If you want to make a treat (so easy it's done in nursery school), try making fruit leathers. In the dehydrator it's a snap, but you can do it in your baking oven as well. It just takes a bit of watching. It makes a great candy and with no added sugar!

Fruit leather

2 c. of the fruit of your choice (apricots, strawberries, pineapple, blueberries, etc.)

Wash and hull or remove pits, chop coarsely, and then process into a puree. In the dehydrator, spread on a sheet of plastic wrap which has been anchored securely to each corner of the rack. If using your ordinary oven, spray a jelly roll pan with a non-stick vegetable coating and spread fruit.

Dry at 150 degrees for approximately 5 to 7 hours. Peel off, lay on plastic wrap and roll; twist ends to seal. Store in cool, dry space for up to 3 months in the refrigerator or 1 year in the freezer.

Speaking of freezing

Freezing is one of the best methods of food preservation, since fewer nutrients are lost and the food does maintain more of its natural appearance. Frozen whole green beans from Walt's garden last year were delicious, just sauteed in a bit of butter. Foods need only to be blanched in hot water and placed in an air tight plastic bags to be freezer ready. There's a nifty freezer apple jelly I wrote about awhile back. If you didn't save the recipe, send me the usual envelope.

An old technique

Pickling is perhaps one of mankind's oldest food peservation methods. Jars of pickled foods have been found in ancient Egyptian and Chinese graves. Pickling, then as now, adds a zip and a zest to the flavor of foods but very little nourishment. Still, Ida's Pickled Watermelon Rinds and Mila's Lazy Housewife's Pickles make a relish plate very special. If you didn't save these recipes from an old column, send me an envelope and I'll get them to you, too.

Question box

Lauriel A. called to ask about a marmalade problem. Dear me, I didn't mean to put canning down completely, as good orange marmalade is hard to come by commercially. I'm glad Lauriel is treating her gang to a tasty toast topper.

Marmalade or other jams and jellies will not set up for several reasons. It may not have enough pectin or perhaps it had not been cooked long enough to reach the "jelly point." A good jelly depends on the proper balance of pectin, acid and sugar. Adding lemon juice for acid or commercial pectin for fruits low in pectin requires the accurate following of recipes including the use of a candy or jelly thermometer.

To remake jelly that did not jell, measure the jelly to be recooked. For each quart of jelly, use ¼ c. [illegible] water and 4 t. powdered pectin. Mix pectin and [illegible] bring to a boil, stirring constantly to prevent [illegible]. Add jelly and sugar; stir thoroughly. Bring to a [illegible] boil over high heat. Remove foam from the jelly [illegible] at once into sterilized jelly glasses. Fill to within [illegible] the top. Process 5 minutes in boiling water bath.

For those of you who plan to do much canning [illegible] Co. has some free sheets on Pickle Pointers, [illegible] ning and Freezing, and a Fact Sheet on Canning [illegible]. For $1 there is a great little book on canning. [illegible] to Kerr Mfg. Corp., Dept CB-JL, Sand Springs, [illegible] 74063.

It's the end of an era

kowitz, the youngster's mother, said. "He's the one who said 'let's give it a try'."

"The Middle School is fully accessible," Craig Boyan, director of special education for the Albany schools, said. The high school, however, is a much older facility, and not — until Markowitz entered — at all accessible.

"That first year, (Markowitz's ninth grade,) there were some questions raised whether it would be the best thing for Jonah to be at the high school," Boyan said.

"We said 'OK, let's see what happens'." The high school's back door was modified with a ramp and one of the bathrooms was made accessible.

Markowitz, however, in spite of the objections of one administrator and the apprehensions of the rest of the school community, was absolutely convinced he could make it at Albany High.

With the support of his parents and sympathetic teachers, staff and administrators, he led a one-man campaign to prove that Jonah Markowitz could make it like any other student at the high school.

"At first they were a little reluctant," Markowitz said. "But I was engaged in the Camp Jonah Initiative and Process. Mr. Boyan won't say it, but they were taking a chance by saying I should come here.

"I was under tremendous pressure in the ninth grade," he said. But devotion to hard work and what his special education teacher, Tom Kellis, calls his "highly motivated, constantly buoyant" personality earned Markowitz the right to stay at the high school until graduation.

Markowitz took on a full academic load ("no gimmick courses"), was a member of the French Club for four years, joined the Video Club this year ("I was a game announcer"), sang in the choir for two years and has written a sports column for the school newspaper.

"I've earned the respect of everyone," he said. "It's not often that a student comes here with such a wide base of support."

With special education funds from the state, the district hired aides who could help Markowitz move around the non-accessible high school. Both a special education and adaptive physical education teacher have been used. A consortium of parents, teachers, administators and staff developed a tailor-made individual education program (IEP) for him.

However, Markowitz took all of his courses with his fellow students: "When they took me into Advanced Biology, I've had to do everything — including the lab," he said. Markowitz is presently dissecting a pig.

Not unexpectedly, one of the greatest hurdles turned out to be the prejudices of his fellow students. While emphasizing the friendship and assistance which most of his classmates have given him, Markowitz said that he was "under pressure socially because of a select few who thought that I was a nice target.

"But, being the tough guy that I am, I took [illegible] on. In any school there will be the troublem[illegible] I've every right to be here."

With the assistance of school administrators [illegible] the majority of the students, the social [illegible] eased: "He's gained the repect of many of the [illegible] dents," principal Jack Marlowe said.

Born in Paris in 1965, Markowitz traveled [illegible] tensively with his family: "Jonah was never kept [illegible] back room," Sandra Markowitz said. "We've [illegible] him all over the world.

"I believe that if a kid needs glasses or somet[illegible] you get 'em. This has just been a continuation [illegible] extension of this."

In 1973 Markowitz lived for six months in [illegible] Later, in 1976 as a 6th grader, he competed in [illegible] Special Olympics, earning medals in four events.

Over the years Markowitz has had to undergo corrective surgery several times. In the ninth gr[illegible] he had surgery which now enables him, with [illegible] to walk.

For the last two years he has been wearing [illegible] cial glasses (Markowitz, always quick to mak[illegible] joke, calls them "Coke bottles") developed by [illegible] UC Low Vision Clinic. These allow him to read newspapers and textbooks.

Markowitz is very careful to give credit to all [illegible] his teachers, Craig Boyan, superintendent Sp[illegible] Goldstone, special education teacher Tom Kellis ("[illegible] special guy, more than a resource"), his adapt[illegible] physcial education teacher and countless others [illegible] who helped him in the Albany school district.

"If you have to cut the article," he told [illegible] Times Journal, "you can't cut the acknowledg[illegible] ments."

Special help and camaraderie came from [illegible] custodial staff at Albany High who opened up the [illegible] first floor room as a kind of home base for [illegible] kowitz: "Larry Eaton, the head custodian, is [illegible] study in there. It gets me out of the halls.

"I'm just like a member of the janitorial st[illegible] Markowitz joked, "but without the salary."

Next year the 18-year-old plans to attend [illegible] Berkeley, majoring in mass communications and [illegible] veloping further his interest in computers.

"I'd like to take political science courses [illegible] said. "I'm also very interested in foreign affairs."

Markowitz's ambitions are journalistic, with [illegible] desire "to travel overseas with a newspaper. I'd [illegible] to interview ... to work behind the scenes."

Markowitz, who plans to walk across the gradu[illegible] tion stage and receive his diploma just like the [illegible] of the senior class, does not consider himself a [illegible] cal activist with respect to disabled causes.

"I do believe that the disabled should be gi[illegible] equal opportunities for jobs and so forth," he said. "Having a disability ... I don't look at it as a [illegible] drance."

If anything, Markowitz's disabilities have [illegible] the Albany community to better understand [illegible] bled people.

"We would like to accomodate another [illegible] like him," Marlowe said. "He's made good [illegible] the high school, but he's also contributed to [illegible] showing us all how to be human."

"I try to be a quiet leader," Markowitz [illegible] "I've tried to show how I can do things and [illegible] can get along with everybody.'

Successful author cashes in on popular history

Carolly Erickson's Tudor biographies

By FRANCES STARN

Two pianos flank the inside entry to writer Carolly Erickson's house near the Berkeley-Albany bord "Occasionally I like to play four-hand of an evening," she explained.

She didn't add that she had also played in various Manhattan cocktail bars and at mountain resorts to get herself throgh graduate school, but her publicist thought it was a humanizing touch to balance a Columbia Ph.D.

Now Erickson varies her evenings by piecing a quilt while watching television, or spending some time with her son or her boyfriend's children, rounding out the life of your average liberated Berkeley woman — but with a few important qualifications. Her working hours are spent writing popular Tudor biographies, along with pieces for a number of general interest and scholarly magazines.

"I just figured that I wrote 15 reviews in the last six weeks," she said. "Too many," she said ruefully. "I do write a lot of journalism, too. Too much," she repeated, but added that reviewing is useful for giving her a different perspective on her own writing. She has also "played around a bit" with paperback romances and now thinks that she'll go into hardcover, under a different name.

In this way, Carolly Erickson actually makes a living from her writing, most recently from her new biography of Elizabeth of England (The First Elizabeth), which follows up on her popular biographies of Henry VIII and Mary Tudor and will shortly be completed by her life of Anne Boleyn. "Absolutely the last of the series," she said.

The singular difference between Erickson and the earnest company of industrious but habitually bankrupt fellow writers is clearly visible in her talk about agents, publishers, subsidiary rights, percentages, and the like. This writer is also a highly competent businesswoman. Such skills allowed her to abandon an academic career while supporting her son and her former husband.

Carolly Erickson

A Ph.D. in history and six years of teaching at Mills and Barnard give her Tudor books plenty of substance as well as the popular appeal to make them bestsellers. Mostly, she says, "The tradition of good popular history seems to be have disappeared rapidly since the '50s." One of her models has always been Garrett Mattingly, who died the same year she arrived at Columbia to study with him, and was famous for reliable and readable books on Catherine of Aragon and the Spanish Armada, among others.

"Most historians now don't seem to be able to wear their learning lightly, to let all that erudition stay between the lines," she observed. In The First Elizabeth, she tries to do just that. She fills descriptive passages with material straight from original sources to draw the life and times of a Tudor princess who had to be shown both dressed and nude as a babe to reassure ambassadors that she was whole and marriageable, but then cannily led her country through the longest period of peacetime prosperity ever headed by any western monarch. Interest in the dynamic Virgin Queen has always been strong and more than 60 books focus on her, but Erickson has added both a new perspective and newly published material to the well-known life.

How did she move from a specialization in the Middle Ages to the Tudors? "They were marketable," she said with a smile. This sort of hard-headedness has not kept her from recognition both by professional historians and by popular review mills like Publisher's Weekly and Kirkus Services. She has been called "The Barbara Tuchman of her generation."

A tall, lanky woman somewhere near 40, she still has the uncertain air of a graduate student who is somewhat amazed that she has "gotten through." But she has no regrets about leaving the academic scene. "It's far too restricting," she said, "although maybe less so at a large university." She added that she might have begun teaching too young, but thinks that she got a "good taste" of what it was like.

She came to the Bay Area in 1967, "for the climate," she said, then added with a laugh, "and the library." A research assistant helps her with her histories.

She also has a new agent, her fifth, to help with the endless contract negotiations of a prolific and successful writer. Between agents she has carried on the business aspect herself, and she is looking forward to delegating it again.

The Anne Boleyn book is at the publisher, and she has a new book underway on the Regency period — besides the venture into romance. It seems unlikely that she has much leisure for the multiple drafts and fine-tuning that most authors boast of and complain about.

"None, in fact," she said. "I'm not saying that my work couldn't benefit from rewriting, but there just isn't time."

There was no irony there, even from a writer who has proven that she has both a historical and a practical grasp of the passage of her own days as well as past centuries.

Hometown heroes: 5 save local family

ALBANY — Five young men on their way home from a barbeque were instrumental last month in saving the house and possibly the lives of a Key Route Boulevard family.

Kevin, Jimmy and Bryan Delaney, Max Hoyle and J.J. Johnson, all Albany residents ranging in age from 19 to 24, were driving by the home of Kuo-Liang Chen just past dusk on April 10 when they noticed smoke coming out the front door.

They stopped, asked a neighbor to call the Fire Department and entered the house to find two apparently confused adults and a child, whom they brought outside. Further search revealed two more children asleep in a bedroom.

The smoke was traced to the living room, where a fire in the fireplace had spread to the wall behind. Firefighters later found that the fireplace had been patched poorly in the past, allowing the flames to spread into the wood structure.

Asked if the young rescuers felt like heroes, Kevin Delaney said, "Pretty much," but Max Hoyle remarked, "It was no big deal."

Ahern-Capeluto wedding

Denise Lynne Ahern, daughter of Lee and Peggy Brown of El Cerrito, was recently married to Samuel Albert Capeluto, son of Lena Capeluto of Albany.

The March 19 ceremony was at Northbrae Community Church.

Lee Brown accompanied his daughter down the aisle. She wore an empire waist dress with victorian sleeves and collar with inlaid lace. Her bouquet was white stephanotis and philinopsis.

Margaret Welis of Albany was her sister's attendant, along with Sunnie and Chris Senne, both of Albany.

The bridegroom's attendants were John Sterlino of El Cerrito, Shawn Phillips of Richmond and Walter Porep of Albany.

Following a reception at the Richmond Country Club, the newlyweds went to Las Vegas. They are living in El Cerrito.

The bride, a graduate of Oakland High School, attended Heald Business College and is computer operations manager of Bass Tickets. Her husband attended Albany High School, and is in business with two brothers in American Florist.

Infant mortality rates down in Alameda Count

Recently released figures for Alameda County show that infant mortality rates have continued to decline in 1981. The infant mortality rate, which is the number of deaths in the first year of life per 1000 live births, was 10.8 for the county as a whole. This represents an average annual decline of almost 4 percent per year, from a rate of 14.7 in 1974.

Perinatal mortality is another measure of the health of mothers and infants. It is the number of stillbirths (fetal deaths) plus the number of deaths in the first month of life (under 28 days) per 1000 births.

Perinatal mortality is generally thought to reflect factors associated with the mother's general state of health and well being during pregnancy and before, and the care she and her baby receive during pregnancy, birth and immediately after birth. Like infant mortality, perinatal mortality rates have been declining in recent years.

In 1981, for the county as a whole, the perinatal mortality rate was 13.6, down from 20.6 in 1974, an average rate of decline of almost 5 percent per year.

There are differences in infant and perinatal mortality rates within the county. Areas where infant and/or perinatal mortality rates have been significantly higher than the county average for a period of several years are designated high risk areas.

Ten areas are currently considered to be high risk: seven of these high risk areas are in Oakland (reaching from north and west Oakland to east Oakland); one is in Berkeley (west Berkeley); and two are in the San Leandro/Hayward area.

Both infant and perinatal mortality rates in these areas have declined between 1974 and 1981. However, there is a continued cause for concern about these areas since both infant and perinatal rates continue to be substantially higher than rates for the rest of the county.

In 1981 the infant mortality rate for the 10 risk areas was 14.0, 30 percent higher than the county rate. The perinatal mortality rate was 16.0, 18 percent higher than that for the county as a whole.

Differences in infant mortality rates for black and white infants in the county still persist, but the gap is narrowing as both groups experience a decline in rates. Infant mortality rates have been declining at a faster rate for blacks than for whites in the county since 1974.

In that year the infant mortality rate for blacks was 53 percent higher than the rate for whites; in 1978 it was 54 percent higher. The figures for 1981 show that the infant mortality rate for black infants is 14.7, which is 43 percent higher than the rate of 10.3 for whites.

A major cause of death and disability in infants is low birthweight, defined as weight of 2500 grams (5 lbs. 8 ozs.) or less at birth. Recognizing this fact, Alameda Co... made substantial efforts to reduce the number... birthweight babies born in the county.

County services for prenatal, obstetrical an... care have been augmented by state funds suppo... Oakland Perinatal Health Project (OPHP). Servi... been specifically targeted for women and infants ... be at high risk.

By Oswald Jacoby and James Jacoby

The unlucky expert had trapped us again with a story about the professor. He said, "The prof is getting old and can't count anymore. I had him set up for a sure bottom at six no-trump, but he made the hand just as all the ordinary players who bid it had."

The prof won the heart lead and lost the spade finesse to the U.E. Back came the queen of diamonds. The prof won and played his top hearts on which the U.E. carefully threw the six and four of diamonds. Next came a club to dummy's ace, three more spades and the last high diamond to leave a three-card ending.

Dummy was left with the king-queen-ten of clubs. The U.E. had clearly been dealt 5-1-5-2 distribution and was down to three singletons. West was marked with three clubs.

"In his prime," said the U.E., "the prof would have taken the three-to-one odds in favor of a finesse against the club jack and gone down two, but he went up and scored his slam."

We had to ask the prof about the play later. He replied:

"If the U.E. had not gone out of his way to show five diamonds, I might well have taken the blow since I could have visualized the distribution without all that help, but I could now see that club jack as clearly as with Superman's X-ray vision."

Astrograph

If your birthday is Wednesday, May 25, 1983

This coming year you are likely to be with more influential people than you have in the past. Don't muff opportunities to strengthen relationships.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) Carefully weigh and analyze your alternatives in career matters today, but don't do so to the point where it leads to indecisiveness. Genuine opportunities for the year ahead are now ready.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) There may be a great deal you would like to do, but others today. This could upset you, because you might not be able to accomplish it all.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) Normally you are able to tolerate, or at least cope with a demanding friend, but today he/she could get under your skin and cause you to react back.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) In competitive involvements today, it's important to do your best at all times. If you become complacent, the opposition could win.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) Subdue urges today to contradict others just for the sake of argument. Actions of this nature could trigger futile debates.

SCORPIO (Oct. 24-Nov. 22) Be practical in joint ventures today, or you may find yourself operating from a weak position and you are giving away more than you'll get.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 23-Dec. 21) Your judgment might not be up to par today. Some steps may have to be retraced. Be sure you have in your feet what you don't have in your head.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) Uncharacteristically, you may have trouble fulfilling duties which you said you'd attend to for another. Get on them before he gets on you.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 19) Friends may not be around to bail you out today if you get yourself in over your head. To be safe side, strap on your own life jacket.

PISCES (Feb. 20-March 20) That little green-eyed monster could be lurking today if you compare your status with that of others. Brush him off the moment he appears.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) Try not to be impulsive or impatient in your commercial affairs today. In your haste to get things done, you could make a big mistake.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) Don't let persons less prudent than you influence your thinking in money matters today. You could be indifferent to your needs.

Two girls' softball teams net 3-0 records

Marika and Park & Shop continue to dominate Division II of the Albany-Berkeley Girls Softball League, both teams finishing the third week of games with identical 3-0 records.

On Saturday, Marika outslugged Capelli's 35-22, Park & Shop edged Sweet Temptations 22-21 and Great Escapes downed Lenny's Meats 23-11.

Sweet Temptations jumped off to a quick 10-2 lead, but Park & Shop narrowed the score to 10-9 in the third inning. Then trailing 18-17 in the sixth, Park & Shop rallied to take a 22-17 lead.

In the bottom of the sixth, a spectacular stop and throw to first for the final out by second baseman Bridget Riley and defensive play by pitcher Andi Accurso and first baseman Stacy Powell checked a four-run comeback by Sweet Temptations.

Great Escapes had a 10-0 shutout until the fourth inning when Lenny's Meat's pushed across their first run and then went on to score another 10 over the next two frames. But it wasn't enough as Great Escapes scored another 13 runs over the last two innings to outlast Lenny's Meats.

Great Escapes' Emily Wagner slugged a triple, two doubles and a single to take hitting honors, while teammate Bronwin Hughe's sparkling force-out at second killed a fifth-inning rally by Lenny's Meats.

Led by Valerie Moore's bases-clearing three-run double in the third inning, Marika downed Capelli's in a slugfest that saw every player on both teams collect a hit. In the fourth inning and ahead 18-15, Marika also registered the league's first triple play.

Capelli's was led by Jessica Levin offensively on the base paths and on defense by catcher Jenny Ott and fielders Anna and Rachel Tavistock.

Play resumes today with Marika vs. Sweet Temptations, 5:30 p.m., at Berkeley High School; Park & Shop vs. Great Espcapes, 5:30 p.m., at Berkeley's West Campus, and Capelli's vs. Lenny's Meats, 5:30 p.m., at LaLoma Park.

On Saturday, Marika plays Park & Shop at 9 a.m., Sweet Temptations takes on Lenny's Meats at 11 a.m. and Capelli's faces Great Escapes at 1 p.m. All Saturday games are at Codornices Park.

There's a first place tie in girls' softball

I'm A Gift and Rosebud are tied for first place following weekend play in Division I of the Albany-Berkeley Girls Softball League.

With her team trailing 7-5 in the fifth inning Saturday, I'm A Gift slugger Kim Handlos drove across the tying and winning runs with a grandslam to power her team into a tie for first. Brenda Halliday and Krista Handlos shared pitching duties for I'm A Gift, now 2-1 in Division I play, while Amy Stelmach and Daria Harrison pitched for Bette's Diner.

Rosebud suffered its first loss of the season, dropping to 2-1 after falling to Colton Construction 14-2. Over the first two innings, Angie Forest pitched for the winners and Lissa Merkel hurled for Rosebud before both coaches took over mound duties.

Games resume today with division leaders Rosebud and I'm A Gift meeting in a 5:30 p.m. contest at LaLoma Park and Bette's Diner and Colton Construction playing at 5:30 p.m. at the Berkeley High School field.

On Saturday, Bette's Diner plays Rosebud at 9 a.m., while I'm A Gift takes on Colton Construction at 11 a.m. Both games are at Grove-Russell Park.
